London Police say they’ve added 40 more charges against London psychiatrist Stanley Dobrowolski, including child exploitation and producing child pornography.

Dobrowolski now faces a total of 43 charges.

Back in November of 2012, Dobrowolski was accused of taping female patients without their knowledge. At that time, he was charged with two counts of sexual assault and one count of voyeurism.

In January, police executed a search warrant at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario, seizing computers and various electronic storage devices that the College had seized from Dobrowolski’s office at 47 Victoria Street. Investigators examined those devices and determined that women had been video-recorded during examinations, without their informed consent. This led to a public appeal asking women who had prior contact with Stanley Dobrowolski to call police.

19 more women have come forward to provide information and now London Police have laid 40 more charges including:

- 18 counts of Sexual Assault
- 10 counts of Voyeurism
- 12 counts of Breach of a Court Order
- 1 count of Child Exploitation
- 1 count of Producing Child Pornography
- 1 count of Possessing Child Pornography

The counts of Child Exploitation, Producing Child Pornography, and Possessing Child Pornography are related to incidents involving a 17-year-old female.

In addition, with the consent of the involved women, the London Police Service has referred 28 cases of potential professional misconduct to the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario.

Dobrowolski’s lawyer, David Humphrey, says his client co-operated with police when made aware of the new accusations.

Dobrowolski was released on bail under strict conditions, and will return to court May 21.

He is not to possess any medication not prescribed to him by a doctor, nor can he prescribe or distribute prescription medication or give any kind of counselling to anyone.

Dobrowolski is not allowed to work or volunteer in any capacity that would mean he might be alone with a woman, he is not allowed to be in any situation where he would be alone with a female under 18.

He is not allowed to contact any of his former patients, nor can he have any hidden recording equipment. He cannot use a computer without the supervision of his wife.

He is also not allowed to have any firearms or weapons in his possession.

He can’t have any devices that can take photos or video, with the exception of his Blackberry, which cannot be used to take photos or video.

He can only use a computer under the supervision of his wife and is not allowed to contact any foreign consular offices.

Dobrowolski is also not to contact any of the women involved in the case, or be within 100 metres of their homes or workplaces.

Police investigating London psychiatrist Stanley Dobrowolski are looking to identify 34 women videotaped without consent

Already facing sex charges and barred from practicing medicine, police are expanding their investigation into a disgraced London psychiatrist.

Investigators are looking to identify 34 women they say were filmed without their consent at the London office of Dr. Stanley Dobrowolski, who has a long history of sexual impropriety dating back to the early ’90s.

In November 2012, police charged Dobrowolski with one count of sexual assault and voyeurism for an incident between 2005 and 2011.

Two months later, under the authority of a search warrant, police obtained computers and electronic storage devices from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario, who had seized the items from Dobrowolski’s Victoria St. office.

Police initially were trying to identify at least seven women they say were secretly filmed at Dobrowolski’s office between 2007 and 2012, but investigators bumped that number up to 34 Tuesday — meaning Dobrowolski could face more charges.

“We need these women to come forward. It would be ideal to get them identified and speak with them about what we have on video,” said Det. Insp. Kevin Heslop.

“Of course there are other allegations that we are investigating that we have interviewed women about. Those matters are still under investigation and will be for a little while longer.”

Police say the women were filmed during physical examinations.

“It’s our position that psychiatrists don’t traditionally perform physical examinations,” Heslop added.

In November a judge released Dobrowolski, already under suspension by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, on $20,000 bail and a strict set of conditions that included not prescribing medicine, only going on a computer in his wife’s presence and surrendering his passport.

Several women have already come forward and been identified but investigators are asking all females who were patients of Dobrowolski between 2007 and 2012 to contact police.

“We appreciate that they might need assistance or support and want them to know the case will be handled sensitively,” Heslop said. “They can always call us and speak with an investigator anonymously.”

Dobrowolski’s history is marked with reprimands for professional misconduct involving female patients.

In all, he’s been found guilty by regulators four times. The string of violations has so far netted him two three-month suspensions and two reprimands.

Former patients should contact the police at 519-660-5842 or e-mail project@police.london.ca if they have any information.
